Raw GRF files with no delay; Sprites of StarCraft 1 Enemy Sprites and unit sprites in StarCraft started to gain improvement in the first and second season. Controllers Force feedback and/or 6DOF joystick controllers are not needed for use with the game. In fact, for PC game, there are no rules about any controller allowed with the game. As a result, iJKD did not support any controller. The original StarCraft boxers were 4 "Game-Boy Color" controllers. Each of them used Game-Boy C/D 4-button controllers. They are used for "Z", "X" and "C", and for "V" and "B". Add-ons There are many add-on programs for StarCraft which enhance the game. Some of them are: Warcraft3MapTool. StarcraftMapTool. StarCraftMapTool for Arcade. For "The Box" the game was bundled with Battle.net for PC. From StarCraft 1.9 to StarCraft 2.0 For StarCraft 1.9 to 2.0, Blizzard Entertainment continued the development as leading company in the gaming industry. They revised the game with new technologies and techniques. For the first time, the game brought a very simple user interface. The game was divided into 3 streams: Explore, Create, and Battle. When a player selects a game mode, the game starts, while another game mode is already in progress in the background. The game had much more aggressive A.I. and new sound effects. The difficult difficulty of RTS games such as StarCraft was revised from "Extremely High" in the previous version to "Extremely Difficult". The most amazing feature was the "Avatar", a 3D model representing the player's character in the game. It was implemented in the Battle.net. StarCraft 2.0 was debuted during the Blizzard Worldwide Invitational 2011 in August 2011. StarCraft 2.0 was a revolutionary release. The graphic and technical aspects of the game were all improved compared to 1.9. Several new features were introduced. Starcraft 2.0 introduced units such as
